Karolina Wojtas takes bizarre photos found online that once obsessed her and recreates them one-to-one, turning anonymous internet images into staged homages.

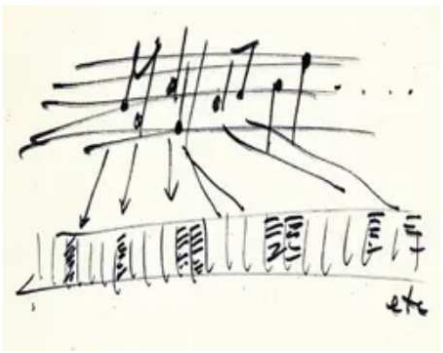

To “steal” them, she meticulously reconstructs the scenes: hunting for similar places, dressing models in the same clothes, and restaging the entire situation as faithfully as possible. Some of these recreated images have even returned to the corners of the internet where she first discovered them, at times outshining the originals. A notorious example is a communion photo that resurfaces every year, sparking the same flood of comments: “what kind of parents are these, what kind of family, how much money did the kid get?” The project both celebrates the pictures that shaped her imagination and highlights how images circulate online, detached from context yet endlessly reinterpreted.

(n)Permanencies Tractatus is a compact experimental shelter embracing ephemerality. It acts as a prototype intuition—like a trace or snapshot reflecting our current condition of environmental decline.

Designed for the 2025 Venice Architecture Biennale, the pavilion stands both as a footprint of ecological decay and a poetic response to it. It transforms invasive algae—resulting from excessive chemical fertilizers—into a low-carbon, biodegradable architectural form. Its materials, including algae "bones" and membranes, are bio-sourced, polymer-based, and engineered with a controlled lifespan. The work adopts a non-deterministic, non-futuristic approach to design, questioning human-driven ecological collapse while exploring themes of fragility, erosion, and nomadism. Rooted firmly in the "here and now," it pushes back against permanence and overproduction, functioning as an erasable, low-impact structure designed to vanish without a trace. This project positions architecture as both an aesthetic and technological experiment—one that investigates adaptability, ecosophy, and the delicate balance between human excess and natural resilience.

Seven synchronized screens re-envision Igor Stravinsky's Le Sacre du Printemps (1913) with aged, nude bodies in stop-motion, cycling through life, death and rebirth while challenging ideals of youth and beauty.

Three central screens show the sacrificial victims—the inner circle of death—while four peripheral screens present the corps de ballet—the outer circle of life, echoing Vaslav Nijinsky's 1913 choreography. In a perpetual loop the victim collapses, rises and dances again, as the corps stamps out the rite's relentless rhythm. Aged, nude performers, their sexual traits subtly blurred, replace the usual young dancers, exposing our fixation on beauty and vitality. Shot in stop-motion, each stiff, arthritic gesture gains a fragile, puppet-like staccato that underscores bodily effort and transience. Merging sacrifice, decay and renewal, Kozyra mirrors Stravinsky's score while confronting viewers with the material limits of the human body and the stereotypes that frame its representation.

SYNC/IDENTITY is a dark ambient exploration of shifting sonic layers, where hypnotic textures and experimental rhythms blur the line between the mechanical and the human.

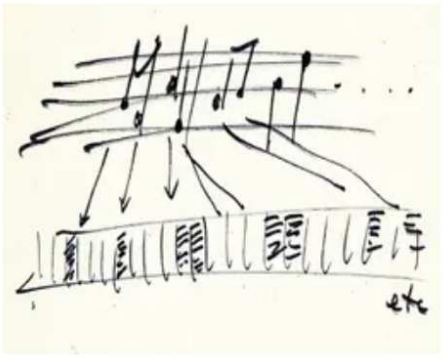

The track unfolds as a dialogue between organic resonance and digital precision, weaving pulsating textures, subtle distortions, and evolving layers that question the boundaries of self in a hyper-connected world. Suspended between tension and transcendence, Sync/Identity is both introspective and cinematic — a sonic journey into identity, fragmentation, and the spaces where technology and humanity converge.

After repeatedly failing Captcha tests, music producer Lara spirals into an existential crisis, haunted by the unsettling thought that she might actually be a robot.

I'm Not a Robot follows Lara, a music producer whose everyday life is disrupted when she inexplicably fails a series of online Captcha tests. What begins as a trivial annoyance soon grows into an obsessive, existential question: could she, in fact, be a robot? Blurring the lines between technology, identity, and self-perception, the film unfolds as a darkly humorous yet unsettling exploration of what it means to be human in a digital age where authenticity is constantly put to the test.

After repeatedly failing Captcha tests, music producer Lara spirals into an existential crisis, haunted by the unsettling thought that she might actually be a robot.

I'm Not a Robot follows Lara, a music producer whose everyday life is disrupted when she inexplicably fails a series of online Captcha tests. What begins as a trivial annoyance soon grows into an obsessive, existential question: could she, in fact, be a robot? Blurring the lines between technology, identity, and self-perception, the film unfolds as a darkly humorous yet unsettling exploration of what it means to be human in a digital age where authenticity is constantly put to the test.

Pain, Suffering

"Pain, Suffering" is an audiovisual composition addressing the theme of cognitive dissonance applied to the objectification and use of non-human beings as food or commodities. Through images, monologues, and sound, it seeks to embody this state of dissociation.

Attention: Light!

Inspired by a visual score envisioned by Paul Sharits before his death, this work translates Chopin's final Mazurka into a composition of pulsating colours and light.
