Providing this data is necessary to finalize the online purchase; otherwise, it cannot be completed. 3. c) Marketing to provide promotional offers INSTITUTION LAB A.P.S. may use your biographical and contact data for marketing and advertising purposes, including informing you of promotional campaigns through automated contact means (email, SMS, mass messaging tools, etc.) and traditional methods (e.g., calls from an operator). 4. d) Customer satisfaction surveys INSTITUTION LAB A.P.S. may use your biographical and contact data to conduct surveys to assess customer satisfaction with the services provided. You can withdraw your consent at any time by emailing institutionsrl@gmail.com. 5. e) Compliance with legally binding requests INSTITUTION LAB A.P.S. may process your contact data to comply with a legal obligation and/or defend its rights in legal proceedings. Legal basis: Legal obligations that INSTITUTION LAB A.P.S. is required to fulfill. Note: You can withdraw your consent to the use of your data at any time by sending an email to info@institution.art or by using the dedicated link to delete your data. HOW WE KEEP YOUR PERSONAL DATA SAFE INSTITUTION LAB A.P.S. uses a wide range of security measures to improve protection and maintain the safety, integrity, and accessibility of your personal data. Your full personal data is stored on our secure servers (or in secure paper copies), or those of our suppliers or business partners, and is accessible and usable only under our security standards and policies (or equivalent standards for our suppliers or business partners). TRANSFER OF DATA OUTSIDE THE EUROPEAN UNION The personal data collected by INSTITUTION LAB A.P.S. may be transferred to countries outside the European Union or the European Economic Area. Such countries may not offer a level of personal data protection equivalent to that guaranteed within the EU. In such cases, transfers will be carried out in full compliance with applicable data protection regulations, adopting all necessary measures to ensure adequate data protection. These measures include, where necessary, the use of Standard Contractual Clauses approved by the European Commission, which impose specific contractual obligations on data recipients in third countries to ensure the security and protection of personal information.

HOW LONG WE KEEP YOUR PERSONAL DATA We keep your personal data only as long as necessary to fulfill the purposes for which it was collected or for any other legitimate related purposes. If personal data is processed for two different purposes, we will retain it until the longer retention period has expired. However, we will no longer use the data for the purpose whose retention period has ended. We restrict access to your data to only those who need to use it for relevant purposes. Any of your personal data that is no longer necessary, or for which there is no legal basis for retention, will be that is no longer necessary, or for which there is no legal basis for retention, will be irreversibly anonymized (and may be retained in this form) or securely destroyed. Here are the retention periods for each of the purposes listed: • Site access and account creation: Data may be kept for the duration of the relationship and no more than 10 years thereafter. • Contractual obligations: Data may be kept for the duration of the contract and up to 10 years after, to verify any outstanding obligations (e.g., invoices). • Marketing purposes: Data may be kept for 24 months from the last time you gave consent (unless you opt out of receiving future communications). • Customer satisfaction surveys: Data may be kept for 24 months from the last time you gave consent (unless you opt out). • In case of legal dispute: Data may be retained for as long as necessary to pursue or defend legal claims.

WHO WE MAY SHARE YOUR PERSONAL DATA WITH Your personal data may be accessed only by authorized employees and external providers designated, where necessary, as data processors, who support the provision of our services. Please contact us by email if you would like to view the list of data processors and other parties with whom your data may be shared. Please note: To complete purchases on the site, you will be redirected to platforms that provide these services. The data you provide on such platforms will be processed exclusively by the operators of those platforms, as independent data controllers, with no prior notice to INSTITUTION LAB A.P.S.

CONTACTS If you have any questions about the processing of your personal data, please send an email to info@institution.art.

YOUR RIGHTS REGARDING PERSONAL DATA AND YOUR RIGHT TO LODGE A COMPLAINT Under certain conditions, you have the right to request: • Access to your personal data • A copy of your personal data • Correction of your data • Deletion of data where there is no legal basis for retention • Objection to processing where permitted under applicable law • Restriction of how we process your personal data • Withdrawal of previously given consent The exercise of these rights is subject to some exceptions aimed at safeguarding the public interest (e.g., the prevention or detection of crimes) and our own interests (e.g., professional confidentiality). If you exercise any of the above rights, we are obliged to verify that you are entitled to do so and will generally respond within one month. For any complaints or concerns about the way your personal data has been handled, we will do our best to address them. However, if you wish, you can contact the data protection authority (Data Protection Authority) using the contacts available at www.garanteprivacy.it. Institution's system rests on two pillars. The first is the blending of the arts: visual arts, music, theater, cinema, literature, but also scientific and social interventions. We live in an era, as Marshall McLuhan foresaw, in which media engage all the senses simultaneously; art, consequently, can only aspire to a synesthetic experience.

The second pillar is the true Copernican revolution: art not as aesthetic luxury or mere economic commodity, but as a sensitive receptor of transformations. After all, artists have always anticipated their times: the Futurists exalted speed and aerodynamics in 1909, when cars still struggled slower than horses; Mondrian and De Stijl envisioned geometric cities when streets were still unpaved; the Russian avant-gardes intuited a new relationship between man and machine while the industrial revolution was only just beginning in many parts of the world.

Technology as a Tool

Institution does not worship technology but uses it critically, to govern it rather than be governed by it. The fruits of this approach can be seen in the platform presented here: a space that allows exploration of works in VR or 2D, interaction with them, thematic pathways, and experimentation with new forms of cultural sociality.

In recent years much has been said about the "metaverse": first presented as a revolution destined to change the world, then quickly dismissed as an exhausted fad. While the term itself may not inspire, the process it describes is far from over: it will continue to develop as technologies improve, with ever greater definition and digital quality. Institution intends to position itself as a pioneer along this path, giving shape to a space that combines aesthetic experience, interaction, and sociality —one that grows alongside digital tools without ever losing sight of its fundamental mission: bringing art closer to life.

A First Step

Today a demonstrative pathway is being presented, one that does not yet anticipate research themes but makes evident the spectacular nature and impact of the mechanism. It is an invitation to imagine what is to come: curatorial projects, interdisciplinary connections, new forms of cultural community.

For Institution is not a point of arrival but a point of departure. It is an open construction site seeking contributions and support: the Kickstarter campaign (Institution: your new cultural space) is an opportunity to take part personally in the building of a different model of cultural institution.

And Tomorrow?

Tomorrow, Institution could become a place where the arts dialogue with each other and with life, a permanent laboratory of knowledge and imagination. In a time that often reduces art to merchandise or entertainment, Institution proposes to restore its highest task: to be a compass for the present and a magnifying glass on the future.

Authors

Fabio Cavallucci

Fabio Cavallucci (1961) is an Italian curator and art critic. He directed institutions such as the Galleria Civica in Trento, the Ujazdowski Castle Centre in Warsaw, and the Luigi Pecci Center in Prato, shaping them into key spaces for contemporary artistic experimentation.

(n)Permanencies Tractatus

François Roche

(n)Permanencies Tractatus is a compact experimental shelter embracing ephemerality. It acts as a prototype intuition—like a trace or snapshot reflecting our current condition of environmental decline.

Inspired by a visual score envisioned by Paul Sharits before his death, this work translates Chopin's final Mazurka into a composition of pulsating colours and light.

Developed in close artistic dialogue with Wiesław Michalak, the piece originated from a conceptual sketch by Paul Sharits, leader of the structural film movement, created during his 1981 stay in Poland. Years later, this idea was reimagined through precise digital synchronisation, giving form to a cinematic score of pure chromatic transitions. Rather than illustrating Chopin's Mazurka in F minor op. 68 no. 4, the film makes its structure visible: hues shift with tonal changes, while sound intensity appears as saturation and contrast. What begins as flickering colour becomes a meticulous visual analogue to musical composition—a film where time is measured in light rather than notes. By transforming Sharits's sketch into a chromatic score, Robakowski reaffirms his commitment to cinema as pure energy—where light, sound, and perception merge into an experience that bypasses representation. The piece continues his quest to free the image from illustration, rejecting the socio-realist pretensions typical of the socialist regimes that shaped Poland and Central Eastern Europe during his youth and maturity, instead proposing a direct sensory encounter that restores the viewer's active role.

“Pain, Suffering” is an audiovisual composition addressing cognitive dissonance in relation to the objectification and exploitation of non-human beings as food or commodities. Through images, monologues, and sound, it seeks to embody this fractured state of perception

At its core, the work features monologues that reflect on the conditions of animals in factory farms and, more broadly, on the shared capacity for pain and suffering between humans and non-humans. These voices underscore the inability—or refusal—to acknowledge that a piece of meat is the body of a living being who has been tortured and killed. Among the texts used are those by activist and educator Gary Yourofsky and by musician and activist Moby.

Musically, “Pain, Suffering” employs distortion and spectral filtering as metaphors for cognitive dissonance: clean sounds are warped until they become abrasive, or filtered to the point of being unrecognizable. The composition is audio-reactive, meaning the imagery responds directly to the evolving sonic landscape.

Visually, the piece juxtaposes documentary footage of factory farming and animal violence with generated and processed images, layering the real and the abstract to intensify the sense of unease and fracture. The result is an immersive environment where dissonance becomes both subject and aesthetic.

Video installation by Suzanne Lacy at Digital platform

In a Quito bullring, over 200 Ecuadorian men recite handwritten letters from women who suffered violence, converting a symbol of patriarchal authority into a space of public introspection and shared responsibility.

The performance departs from traditional narratives by placing men in the position of vocal intermediaries, transmitting the lived realities of women through a public, collective act. Their presence does not reassert dominance but rather reframes it as a conduit for acknowledgment and repair. Orchestrated in dialogue with local communities and state institutions, the work navigates the terrain between visibility and silence, inviting audiences to consider how voices are transmitted, received, and sustained in the public sphere. More than a symbolic reversal, the gesture reconfigures relations between gender, speech, and power, while raising urgent questions about cultural responsibility and systemic change.

In a Quito bullring, over 200 Ecuadorian men recite handwritten letters from women who suffered violence, converting a symbol of patriarchal authority into a space of public introspection and shared responsibility.

The performance departs from traditional narratives by placing men in the position of vocal intermediaries, transmitting the lived realities of women through a public, collective act. Their presence does not reassert dominance but rather reframes it as a conduit for acknowledgment and repair. Orchestrated in dialogue with local communities and state institutions, the work navigates the terrain between visibility and silence, inviting audiences to consider how voices are transmitted, received, and sustained in the public sphere. More than a symbolic reversal, the gesture reconfigures relations between gender, speech, and power, while raising urgent questions about cultural responsibility and systemic change.

Karolina Wojtas takes bizarre photos found online that once obsessed her and recreates them one-to-one, turning anonymous internet images into staged homages.

To “steal” them, she meticulously reconstructs the scenes: hunting for similar places, dressing models in the same clothes, and restaging the entire situation as faithfully as possible. Some of these recreated images have even returned to the corners of the internet where she first discovered them, at times outshining the originals. A notorious example is a communion photo that resurfaces every year, sparking the same flood of comments: “what kind of parents are these, what kind of family, how much money did the kid get?” The project both celebrates the pictures that shaped her imagination and highlights how images circulate online, detached from context yet endlessly reinterpreted.

(n)Permanencies Tractatus is a compact experimental shelter embracing ephemerality. It acts as a prototype intuition—like a trace or snapshot reflecting our current condition of environmental decline.

Designed for the 2025 Venice Architecture Biennale, the pavilion stands both as a footprint of ecological decay and a poetic response to it. It transforms invasive algae—resulting from excessive chemical fertilizers—into a low-carbon, biodegradable architectural form. Its materials, including algae "bones" and membranes, are bio-sourced, polymer-based, and engineered with a controlled lifespan. The work adopts a non-deterministic, non-futuristic approach to design, questioning human-driven ecological collapse while exploring themes of fragility, erosion, and nomadism. Rooted firmly in the "here and now," it pushes back against permanence and overproduction, functioning as an erasable, low-impact structure designed to vanish without a trace. This project positions architecture as both an aesthetic and technological experiment—one that investigates adaptability, ecosophy, and the delicate balance between human excess and natural resilience.

Seven synchronized screens re-envision Igor Stravinsky's Le Sacre du Printemps (1913) with aged, nude bodies in stop-motion, cycling through life, death and rebirth while challenging ideals of youth and beauty.

Three central screens show the sacrificial victims—the inner circle of death—while four peripheral screens present the corps de ballet—the outer circle of life, echoing Vaslav Nijinsky's 1913 choreography. In a perpetual loop the victim collapses, rises and dances again, as the corps stamps out the rite's relentless rhythm. Aged, nude performers, their sexual traits subtly blurred, replace the usual young dancers, exposing our fixation on beauty and vitality. Shot in stop-motion, each stiff, arthritic gesture gains a fragile, puppet-like staccato that underscores bodily effort and transience. Merging sacrifice, decay and renewal, Kozyra mirrors Stravinsky's score while confronting viewers with the material limits of the human body and the stereotypes that frame its representation.

SYNC/IDENTITY is a dark ambient exploration of shifting sonic layers, where hypnotic textures and experimental rhythms blur the line between the mechanical and the human.

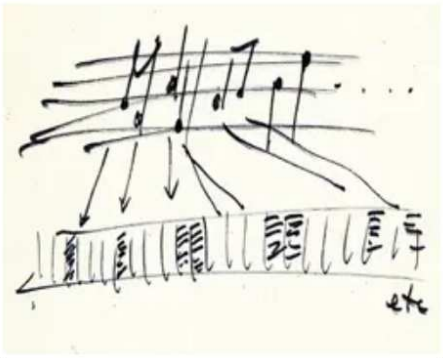

The track unfolds as a dialogue between organic resonance and digital precision, weaving pulsating textures, subtle distortions, and evolving layers that question the boundaries of self in a hyper-connected world. Suspended between tension and transcendence, Sync/Identity is both introspective and cinematic — a sonic journey into identity, fragmentation, and the spaces where technology and humanity converge.

SYNC/IDENTITY is a dark ambient exploration of shifting sonic layers, where hypnotic textures and experimental rhythms blur the line between the mechanical and the human.

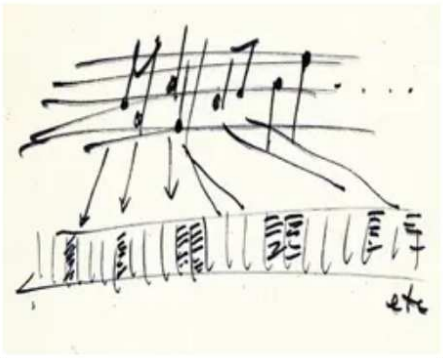

The track unfolds as a dialogue between organic resonance and digital precision, weaving pulsating textures, subtle distortions, and evolving layers that question the boundaries of self in a hyper-connected world. Suspended between tension and transcendence, Sync/Identity is both introspective and cinematic — a sonic journey into identity, fragmentation, and the spaces where technology and humanity converge.

After repeatedly failing Captcha tests, music producer Lara spirals into an existential crisis, haunted by the unsettling thought that she might actually be a robot.

I'm Not a Robot follows Lara, a music producer whose everyday life is disrupted when she inexplicably fails a series of online Captcha tests. What begins as a trivial annoyance soon grows into an obsessive, existential question: could she, in fact, be a robot? Blurring the lines between technology, identity, and self-perception, the film unfolds as a darkly humorous yet unsettling exploration of what it means to be human in a digital age where authenticity is constantly put to the test.

Inspired by a visual score envisioned by Paul Sharits before his death, this work translates Chopin's final Mazurka into a composition of pulsating colours and light.

Developed in close artistic dialogue with Wiesław Michalak, the piece originated from a conceptual sketch by Paul Sharits, leader of the structural film movement, created during his 1981 stay in Poland. Years later, this idea was reimagined through precise digital synchronisation, giving form to a cinematic score of pure chromatic transitions. Rather than illustrating Chopin's Mazurka in F minor op. 68 no. 4, the film makes its structure visible: hues shift with tonal changes, while sound intensity appears as saturation and contrast. What begins as flickering colour becomes a meticulous visual analogue to musical composition—a film where time is measured in light rather than notes. By transforming Sharits's sketch into a chromatic score, Robakowski reaffirms his commitment to cinema as pure energy—where light, sound, and perception merge into an experience that bypasses representation. The piece continues his quest to free the image from illustration, rejecting the socio-realist pretensions typical of the socialist regimes that shaped Poland and Central Eastern Europe during his youth and maturity, instead proposing a direct sensory encounter that restores the viewer's active role.

This website serves as the gateway to the online digital platform of Institution, which follows the same research principles as the entire project—namely, the integration of all arts along with discursive interventions and a research system based on paths that address the most important issues of our contemporary society. The platform offers complete artistic experiences in themselves, which can be accessed in three different ways: A) by entering the digital space of spacial.io with a VR headset; B) by experiencing the same content on a computer, tablet, or smartphone in a 2D version; C) or by exploring them in a further simplified 2D version that, while maintaining the complexity of the VR space, is easily usable with any connection or digital hardware. The system is highly participatory through a commenting and chat system, and in the near future, it will allow, to some degree, the public to upload items for review, especially for expert users.

The VR version and its direct 2D translation are organized into pavilions designed by the architecture studio Clouds a.o. The simplified 2D version, designed by Marcel Kaczmarek, is based on the same operational principles of the VR space, but with a more functional graphic system for computer or smartphone screens.

Currently Institution is a unique and autonomous online platform, but once the physical space is open, the two sections will operate at least in part in connection with each other, further pushing the boundaries of a new experimental space never before explored: the infosphere, the blending of the real and the virtual.

Physical Space

Institution is working on the opening of its physical headquarters in New York, scheduled for 2027. As a privileged center for the meeting and exchange of the arts, a mandatory destination for industry professionals, New York will enhance its international visibility, allowing it to quickly emerge as an innovative model for an artistic institution.

The building, currently under design by the architectural studio Clouds a.o., will feature a coexistence of spaces dedicated to various activities that are interconnected, fostering interdisciplinarity while ensuring a high-quality, specific experience.

Based on its capacity for in-depth research and a method that makes it simultaneously highly popular, with a research system categorized by tags focused on pressing contemporary themes, Institution aims to change the way the arts are disseminated, contributing to giving the arts greater weight in society than they currently hold.

W096 原图纵向 1060–2120 像素

Santa Sofia Lab and Carrara Lab

Completing the organizational constellation of Institution are two research and production laboratories: the Santa Sofia Lab and the Carrara Lab. The first operates at the intersection of culture, new technologies, and sustainability. Located in Santa Sofia, a small village at the edge of the Casentino Forests, Monte Falterona, and Campigna Park, it manages the local Civic Gallery and a Sculpture Park that stretches along the Bidente River. It develops research on the sustainability of cultural institutions and the use of technology to facilitate and expand access to culture and art, while also managing educational and research courses.

The Carrara Lab is located in the town of Carrara, a center for the extraction of the famous white marble, rich in sculptural production workshops and home to one of Italy's oldest Academies of Fine Arts. The local traditional experience in sculpture, already linked to new technologies through the extensive use of robotics, is now being expanded by the Carrara Lab of Institution to develop research and production in the field of digital 3D. The creation of the laboratory also involves the University of Sant'Anna in Pisa.

History

The idea for the need of a new artistic institution aimed at bringing the arts closer to people grew over time in the mind of Fabio Cavallucci, an Italian curator and art critic, who for many years served as the director of artistic institutions both in Italy and abroad. He has always sought to expand the audience for the arts. The project has garnered support, especially among young people, some of whom have dedicated periods of their lives to help grow the project. Among them is Hu Huiming, who accepted the role of president of the founding association Institution Lab and later became the CEO of the startup Institution Srl.

During the lockdowns caused by Covid, the digital platform component was developed, which in fact was the first to launch, thanks to funds from the PNRR dedicated to New Generation EU.

Tom Cebic, an astute entrepreneur based in New York, became the American driving force behind Institution, contributing expertise in business model development and technology. Lucilla Grossi, an Italian designer, made a significant contribution, particularly in the production of the platform and the development of the sustainability theme. Gianpaolo Mazzoni and Giovanna Bernardini worked on the construction of the Carrara Lab, while the Municipality of Santa Sofia collaborated in the creation of the Santa Sofia Lab.
